Holiday greetings, Farm Credit customer-owners! I am thrilled to formally introduce myself in this edition of our Leader magazine. My name is Pete Cypret, and it is an honor to serve as your new chief executive officer. I assumed the role on the first of October, but I have served Farm Credit of the Virginias as chief risk officer since June 2019. It has been a pleasure getting to meet and interact with some of you at our customer appreciation events this fall, but I am eager to meet more of you in the new year. Please rest assured that I, along with our capable team and Board of Directors, are dedicated to supporting you, your families and your operations.

Our cooperative remains committed to fulfilling our mission and helping our customer-owners navigate an ever-changing economic landscape. We concluded the third quarter of 2025 with a total loan volume of $2.43 billion and net income of $29.1 million. Our credit quality remains strong at 96.16% acceptable.

One of our ways our Association stays engaged with our rural communities is through our charitable giving efforts. Our Charitable Contributions Fund enables our cooperative to make investments in the agriculture industry and the communities we serve. We are pleased to share that 16 deserving organizations received grant funding totaling more than $130,000 in the fourth cycle of the Farm Credit of the Virginias Charitable Contributions Fund (CCF) grant program. This fall, we also invested $43,000 in the future of agriculture by extending grants to seven post-secondary education institutions in the second funding cycle of our Agricultural Career Enhancement (ACE) grant program. I can't wait to hear about the enduring effects of these grant projects in our rural communities. Learn more about our two grant programs and meet the recipients on page 5.

Customer appreciation event season here at FCV is always a highlight for our team members, and we are so glad to have the opportunity to visit with many of you at the various events held throughout our footprint. Check out the recap of our 2025 customer appreciation event season on page 4.

In early November, we joined more than 800 Farm Credit representatives from across the country on Capitol Hill to participate in the Farm Credit Fly-in and Marketplace Reception. Our team members, directors and customer-owners conducted visits with our Congressional delegation and their staff to share the Farm Credit story, discuss the challenges facing rural America and advocate for a strong Farm Bill. With the quick and steep rise of interest rates, volatile markets and high input costs, a strong Farm Bill will be crucial in providing our producers some much-needed predictability and certainty. Learn more about our trip to Washington, D.C. on page 11.

The Farm Credit Knowledge Center continues to work hard to provide our members with valuable, relevant and timely resources through the online Digital Resource Hub (formerly known as the Member Portal), e-newsletters, as well as both virtual and in-person events and workshops. Earlier this year, the Knowledge Center team added an impressive 16-part Farm Transition Planning Course to the Digital Resource Hub, a crucial topic for families to discuss and one that is always top-of-mind as we look to support the sustainability of agriculture throughout our footprint.

As we turn the page from 2025 to 2026, I wish you and your loved ones a joyful holiday season and a favorable start to the new year. We appreciate your business and look forward to serving as your trusted financial partner for many years to come.

FROM VINE TO VISION

How John Noer is Building a Legacy in Virginia Wine Country

In the heart of Augusta County, Virginia, a new spin on an old practice is taking place. At just 30 years old, John Noer is leading a bold and ambitious venture in the Shenandoah Valley, transforming an old farm property into a thriving vineyard and winery operation known as Noer Vineyards.

What makes this operation so unique is the underground cave on the property which houses the production facility. One of only a smattering on the East Coast and the largest in Virginia, Noer Vineyards' wine cave is definitely worth a closer look!

John's journey into viticulture began long before Noer Vineyards was even a concept. As a teenager in Western Loudoun County, he helped his father tend a modest two acres of grapes. After a stint in Arizona working in specialty agriculture, John returned to Virginia to work at Willowcroft Farm Vineyards, Loudoun County's oldest winery. There he gained hands-on experience in the vineyard, cellar and even tasting room, which contributed to the knowledge and confidence John needed to take the leap into his own vineyard project.

In 2018, after visiting 85 properties throughout the Shenandoah Valley, John and his family purchased the parcel of land in Verona, Va. that would become the foundation for their vertically integrated estate winery. They planted their first 25-acre block of vines in 2020, and continued adding 25-acre blocks until they reached the 100 acres under vine on the property today. By 2024, Noer Vineyards produced its first vintage in-house, and a second vintage is already underway this year. The goal is to eventually have 200-220 acres under vine, growing about 15 varietals. Currently Noer Vineyards grows 14 grape varietals, including pinot blanc, pinot gris, semillon, sauvignon blanc, chardonnay, viognier, riesling, pinot meunier, pinot noir, merlot, malbec, cabernet franc, petit verdot and cabernet sauvignon. Seven white wines from the 2024 vintage are currently available (with four receiving gold medals and one silver in the recent Shenandoah Cup), while the reds are still aging in the cellar.

One of the most distinctive features of the winery is its underground cave production facility, a decision driven by both economics and wine quality. With his economist father's guidance, John realized that the cave facility would pay off in 16-17 years, much faster than the steel building he'd originally planned on for production. John explained, "There's no HVAC, lower maintenance and energy costs, plus reduced wine evaporation in barrels." The cave also provides ideal humidity and temperature conditions, making it a smart long-term investment for wine production.

After spending much of his time in production during the first several years of operation, John is now more focused on expanding direct-to-consumer sales, working with wholesalers, building an e-commerce platform and designing a tasting room that will offer guests a full sensory experience: a good meal, a glass of wine and sweeping views of the valley. Tasting room construction is expected to begin this winter, with a grand opening anticipated within two years.

John's approach to business is rooted in practicality and perseverance. "I didn't realize how big the apple was when I took the first bite," he says, reflecting on the scale of the project. "But turning everything into small stepping stones makes it doable." That mindset helped him navigate the uncertainty of launching a vineyard during a global pandemic, as well as ongoing challenges such as finding the right workforce and pest management.

Fortunately, John has built a strong team around him. He employs 10 people, including a vineyard manager and associate winemaker, and maintains close relationships with his vineyard crew, many of whom he's known for over a decade.

Mentorship has also played a key role in John's growth. Early experiences with his father and at Willowcroft gave him a hands-on education, while more recently, guidance from Luca Paschina, winemaker at Barboursville Vineyards, has helped him scale operations and refine his own winemaking techniques.

Financing such an undertaking required the right partner, and for John, that partner was Farm Credit. "They helped us from the beginning on this project," he shared, "from purchasing the initial land parcel to building and home loans." He appreciates Farm Credit's understanding of agriculture, customer service, cooperative structure and patronage refunds. "It's nice to know the extra money goes back to the people building the business, as opposed to lining a CEO's pocket."

Looking ahead, John is optimistic. The 2025 vintage is shaping up beautifully, and with the tasting room on the horizon, Noer Vineyards is poised to become a destination for wine lovers across the region. For John, the most rewarding part of the journey is seeing the land transformed, watching vines he planted five years ago now yield fruit and knowing that every bottle tells a story of patience, passion and purpose. As he puts it, "This is not a fast turnaround. But those little wins along the way – they're what make it all worth it."

GROWING TOWARD THE FUTURE

A Young Farmer's Vision

In the mountains and river valleys of Hampshire County, West Virginia, a 17-year-old with a passion for sheep, a deep respect for history and stewardship, as well as a vision for the future is learning the ins and outs of managing his own agricultural operation.

Grandin Lewis, a senior at Hampshire High School, is not your average teenager. While many of his peers are navigating the typical rites of passage, Grandin is managing a growing Suffolk sheep operation that he has funded himself over the past six years. His journey began with a loan through Farm Credit's youth loan program, and it has since evolved into a full-fledged enterprise that's earned him national recognition and a seat on the United Junior Suffolk Sheep Association Board.

"I've been around agriculture my whole life," Grandin says. "It's a legacy. I went to my first livestock show when I was just a few months old." That legacy runs deep – his meemaw was a 4-H Club leader for 37 years, his family's flock dates back to 1928 and his father, Isaac Lewis, is a longtime ag educator at Hampshire High. However, Grandin's path is uniquely his own.

What started as a few club lambs for the county fair has grown into a competitive Suffolk breeding program consisting of about 25 sheep. Grandin shows at national events such as the North American International Livestock Exposition in Louisville, Ky.

and the All-American Junior Sheep Show, which will be held in Timonium, Md. in 2026. He's also developed close relationships with prominent sheep producers across the country, including the Russell family of Muncie, Ind., whose mentorship and hospitality have helped shape his goals. "They treat me like family," Grandin shared. "And being out in Indiana made me take a liking to Purdue University, and Purdue works directly with Reproduction Specialties Group (RSG), which is where I hope to work one day." RSG is a pioneer and leading service provider when it comes to breeding, nutrition, animal health and genetics in the sheep industry.

Grandin's operation is more than just a business; it's a mission to encourage other young people to get involved in agriculture. He dreams of producing high-quality lambs that will help other young people succeed in the industry. "I've had people help me along the way," he said. "Now I want to give back. I want to support kids at the county fair, at state fairs, even nationally."

That sense of community is a recurring theme in Grandin's story. Grandin is quick to credit others for his success, whether it's the Auvelles from Mount Sidney, Va., who helped him get started with Suffolks, or the countless families he's met through shows and sales. "Even when we're competing, they're still cheering me on," he reflected. "That's what makes agriculture different." He is also grateful for the support he's received from Farm Credit, since he took out his first loan through the youth loan program in 2021. He appreciates how present Farm Credit is in the community and how active the cooperative is with youth agriculture programs.

Grandin is no stranger to challenges, one of which being the sorrow of losing favorite ewes – animals he had raised and showed, bonded with, and had high hopes for. "It's mentally and physically draining sometimes," he admitted. "But you have to keep your head up. You have to ask yourself every day, 'What can I do to get 1% better?'"

That mindset extends to his advice for other young people interested in agriculture: be present, work hard, focus on good nutrition and don't be afraid to ask questions or make mistakes. "You're going to lose sometimes," Grandin shared. "But that's just one judge's opinion on one day. You learn, you grow and you keep going."

As Grandin looks ahead, he remains grounded in the values that brought him here, including family, community and a love for the animals he works with every day. He emphasized the importance of loving what you do, otherwise it's difficult to stay motivated through the challenging times.

Isaac Lewis, Grandin's father and mentor, has watched his son carve out his own path with pride. "Grandin has taken his own steps in this process," he shared. "He's not just following in my footsteps; he's building something new." Isaac, who has taught animal science, animal production and veterinary studies at Hampshire High for over 25 years, has helped transform the school's ag program from modest setup with rabbits in the office to a multi-building facility with a swine herd, grooming lab and hands-on learning opportunities for students, including an entrepreneurship class in which the students run a fully operational pet grooming business out of the school.

Isaac is especially proud of how the program empowers students to take ownership. "When I can leave for a day and know the animals will be cared for, the shots will be given and the barn will run smoothly – that's when I know we're doing something right," he says.

Farm Credit is known for building relationships with its customers, but it goes further than that. The Farm Credit System was established by Congress 109 years ago, and the directors and employees of Farm Credit understand the importance of sharing the Farm Credit story with those key members. Relationships are built by visiting and meeting with representatives in Washington, D.C. and the states within our territory, making trips to locations they are visiting and participating in events where we can share our story.

Farm Credit Goes to Washington to Advocate for a Strong Farm Bill

Farm Credit of the Virginias lives and breathes our support for agriculture and our rural communities, including through our legislative advocacy at the state and federal level. This November, our directors, customers and team members joined more than eight hundred Farm Credit representatives and customer-owners from across the country in Washington, D.C. for the 2025 Farm Credit Fly-in. Given the impacts of farm programs and the need for a bipartisan Farm Bill 2.0, we hit Capitol Hill to bring the Farm Credit mission to life and garner continued support of our legislative priorities.

The Farm Credit Fly-in kicked off with an opening session with key members of the House & Senate Agriculture Committees and policy updates from the staff of the Farm Credit Council. FCV was front and center by the House and Senate office buildings, featuring coffee from customer-owner Moo Thru/Moo Brew & Cool Lawn Farms of Remington, Va.

On Capitol Hill, team members and directors conducted visits with our Congressional delegation and their staff, including the offices of Senator Capito (W.Va.), Senator Justice (W.Va.), Senator Warner (Va.), Senator Kaine (Va.), Rep. Cline (Va.), Rep. Griffith (Va.), Rep. McGuire (Va.), Rep. Miller (W.Va.), Rep. Moore (W.Va.), Rep. Vindman (Va.), and Rep. Subramanyam (Va.). In each meeting, we discussed the importance of key priorities for Farm Credit included in the Farm Bill 2.0. These priorities will allow us to better serve agriculture and rural America. Most importantly, our customer-owners and directors shared their personal Farm Credit story, bringing our mission to life.

A favorite of the Farm Credit Fly-in is the system-wide Congressional Reception and Marketplace event. Farm Credit invites congressional representatives and their staff to engage with our team and peruse customer-produced products to take home. Our customer-produced offerings ranged from ice cream, fresh fruits and vegetables, pumpkins, mums and more. Farm Credit of the Virginias featured the following customer-owners and their products at the reception:

- Brookedale Farms, LLC
(Mineral County, W.Va.)
- Moo Thru & Cool Lawn Farm
(Fauquier County, Va.)
- Reese's Farm Fresh Produce & Market
(Halifax County, Va.)
- Spring Valley Farm & Market
(Hampshire County, W.Va.)
